
Netherlands: two “walls of tears” in Wijk bij Duurstede to remember the pandemic and its victims

Two small “walls of tears” have been erected in the municipality of Wijk bij Duurstede, in the province of Utrecht in the Netherlands, where since December citizens can leave their reflections, prayers and concerns related to the COVID-19 pandemic. The idea came from the mayor, Iris Meerts, and was implemented by four local churches (the Reformed, Baptist, Protestant and Catholic communities).

Immagine non disponibile